SUBJECT: ONITSHA UNREST: RED CROSS REPORTING THOUSANDS DISPLACED

REF: LAGOS 289 AND PREVIOUS

Classified By: Classified by Acting Pol/Econ Chief Shannon Ross for reasons 1.4(b) and (d).

¶1. (SBU) Following three days with no reports of violence in Onitsha, Anambra State, Nigerian Red Cross reported three Hausa Muslims and one Igbo man were killed in a skirmish outside a hotel on February 25. A police officer escorting Hausas from the hotel allegedly shot and killed an Igbo man approaching his group. The Igbos retaliated by killing the police officer and two other Hausas.

¶2. (SBU) Anambra Governor Ngige's Special Media Assistant Fred Chukwuemobe told us approximately 10,000 Hausas remain in refuge in army barracks in Onitsha, fearing retribution by Igbos. Press reports similar numbers displaced. Anambra State government is paying roughly naira 4.5 million (USD 34,615) per day to feed displaced Muslims at the Ontisha camp, he said. Chuwuemobe said Governor Ngige plans to visit Abuja tomorrow to speak with President Obasanjo, and request federal government assistance in preventing further escalation of tensions in Anambra.

¶3. (SBU) Red Cross reported no new violence in Enugu, Enugu State and Mina, Niger State. Red Cross Disaster Management Officer Adeyemo Andronitus said approximately 2,000 Igbos remain in refuge in army barracks in Kontagora, Niger Sate.

¶4. (C) Comment: The immediate spark for recent violence in Onitsha appears to have been the return of bodies of Igbo traders, natives of Onitsha, killed in riots in the north of the country. The initial impetus for killings in the north was apparently anger over the proposed Presidential third term. The violence may be building into a cycle of sectarian killing and retribution in cities throughout Nigeria. With thousands reported displaced and fearing for their lives, the situation bears careful watching. End comment.
